Reaching That Peak: 75 Years of the Dartmouth Outing Club
By David Hooke ’84
A 500-page collection of stories, anecdotes, and misadventures of Dartmouth’s best-known student organization, the Outing Club, through the years. Humorous, sentimental, lavishly illustrated with photos and maps, this book is a unique introduction to what makes Dartmouth special. We urge you to buy this book, and become involved in the history of the D.O.C. yourself.

Talus: A History of the Dartmouth Mountaineering Club
By Dean Engle ’92
The 1938 Dartmouth Mountaineering Journal ended with a collection of “notes from abroad and at home”, titled “Talus”. The Dartmouth Mountaineering Club published twelve more journals, which recounted first ascents on Mount McKinley, reconnaissance trips to Alaska and Yukon, and summer climbs in the Teton and the Andes. Talus: A History of the Dartmouth Mountaineering Club is a compilation of these journals, along with the history of mountaineering club’s climbing school, the first school of its kind in the nation; and tales ranging from the Teton tea parties to the Corbet control system. In the words of Glenn Exum, founder of the nation’s best-known mountaineering school: “That’s where college climbing started... at Dartmouth.” Talus is the account of one of the most dynamic and influential clubs in the history of American mountaineering.

An Unlikely Cathedral: Moosilauke, Dartmouth and the Ravine Camp, 1909-1939
(VHS, 31 minutes)
Mount Moosilauke is Dartmouth College’s mountain refuge, and the Ravine Lodge – one of the largest log buildings in New Hampshire – is the gateway to this unique preserve. “An Unlikely Cathedral” tells how the Ravine Camp (now Lodge) came to be. This unlikely story weaves this mountain history with Dartmouth’s leadership role in skiing and the outdoors.
