The Table reports sample characteristics (columns (1)-(2)) and the political regime classification according to various methodologies (columns (3)-(6)). Column 1 reports the first year of data availability of real per capita GDP. Column (2) reports the total number of observations of the dependent variable (logarithmic growth of real per capita GDP).

Column (3) reports the political regime classification of Papaioannou and Siourounis (2006) that covers the period 1960-2005. The column reports the democratization year for the reforming countries. Democratization countries are further classified to three groups depending on the level of political reforms, to "full", "partial" and "borderline". Reverse transition episodes indicate the country and year when a country moved from relatively stable democratic rule to autocracy. There are also three categories of non-reforming countries, always democratic, always autocratic and always intermediate status.

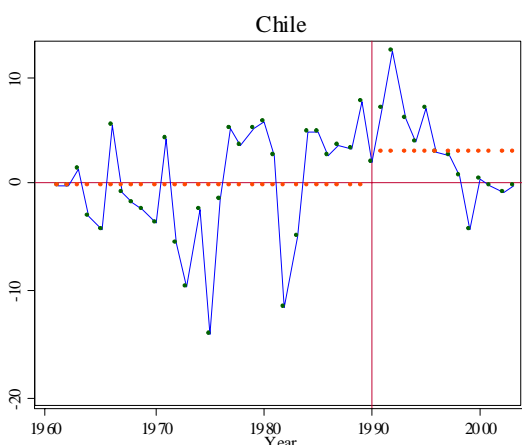

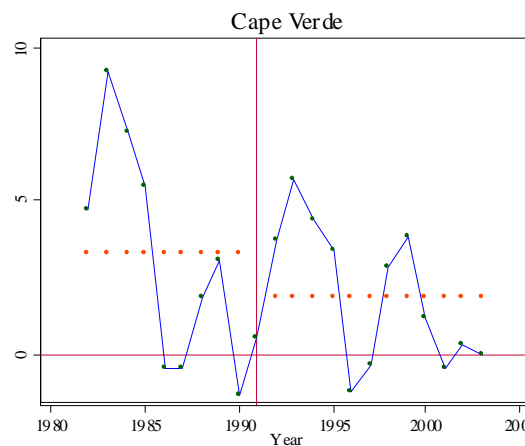

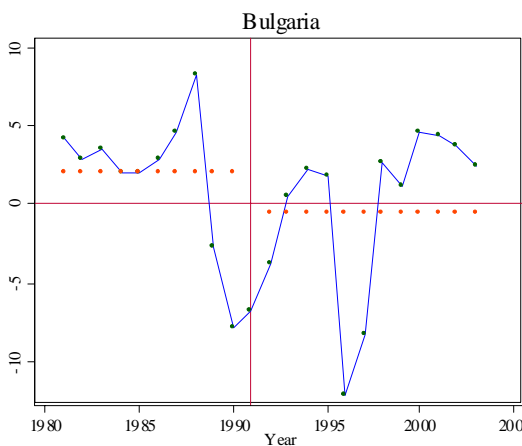

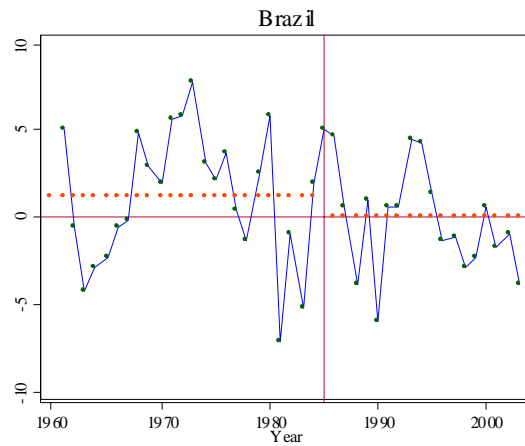

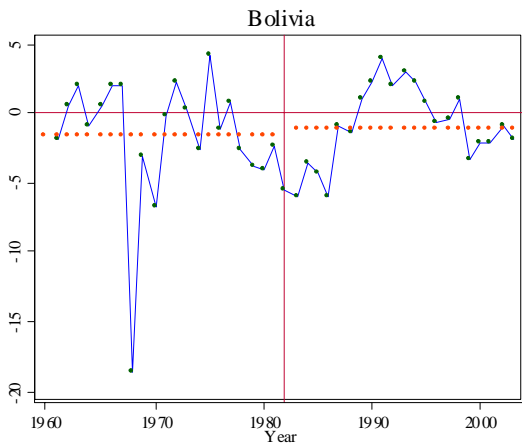

Column (4) reports the political regime classification, when one employs the median value (zero) of the composite democracy index of the Polity IV Project to distinguish autocratic with democratic regimes. The Polity democracy measure ranges from -10 to +10, with smaller values indicating a lower level of political freedom and covers the period 1960-2005. The column reports the democratization year or the year of a reverse regime transition from relatively stable democracy to autocracy for reforming countries. "Always/mostly positive" indicate stable democratic countries, while "Always/mostly negative" indicate stable non-democratic countries.

Column (5) reports the political regime classification, when one employs the regime characterization of Freedom House that spans the period 1972-2005. There are three regimes, "not free (NF)", "partly free (PF)" and "free (F)". The column reports the democratization year or the year of a reverse regime transition from relatively stable democracy to autocracy for reforming countries. Non-reforming countries are split to always non-democratic (Always/mostly "NF"), always partly-democratic (Always/mostly "PF"), always democratic (Always/mostly "PF"), and intermediate regimes that move often across categories.

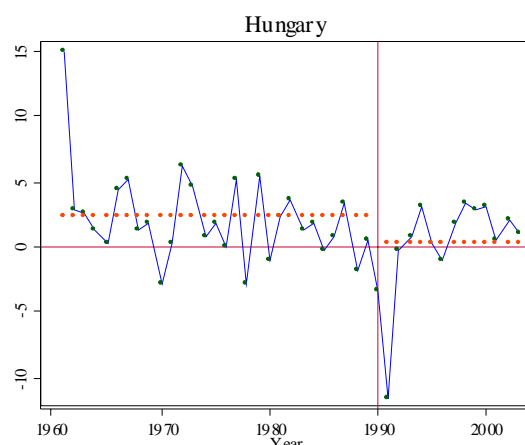

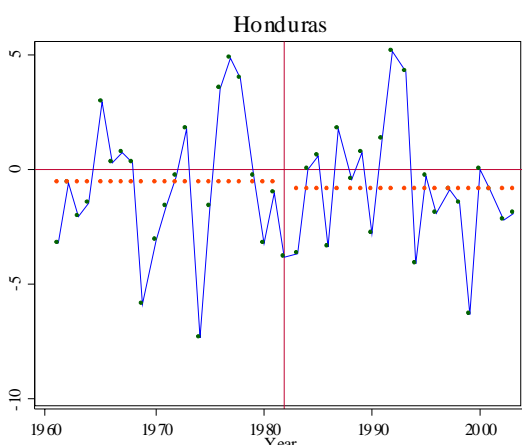

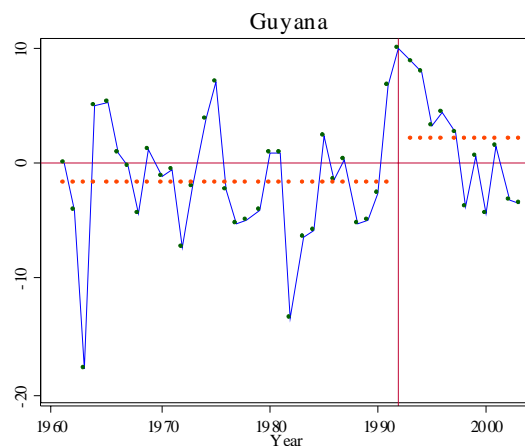

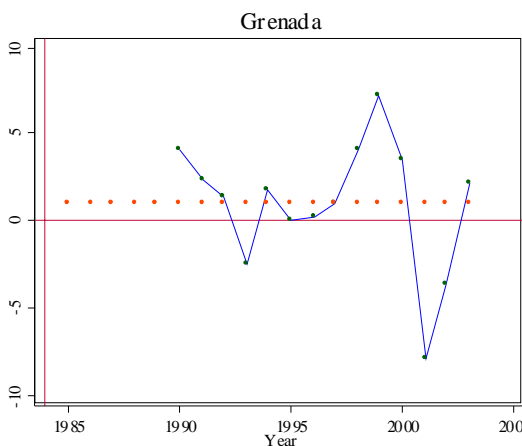

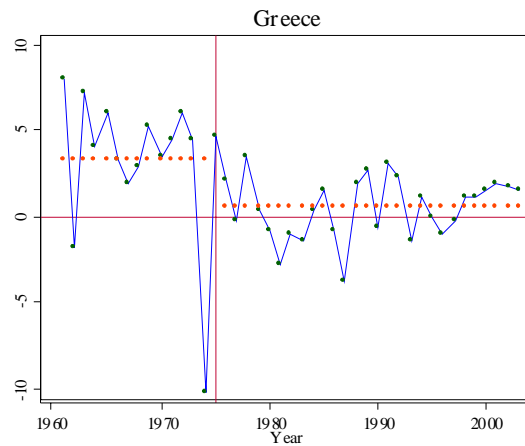

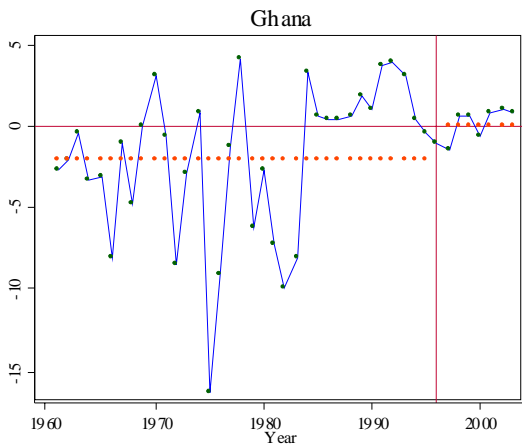

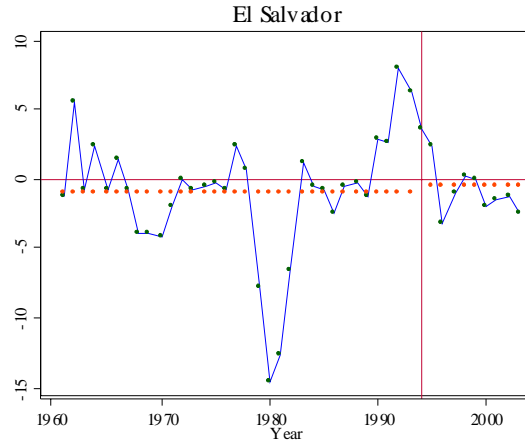

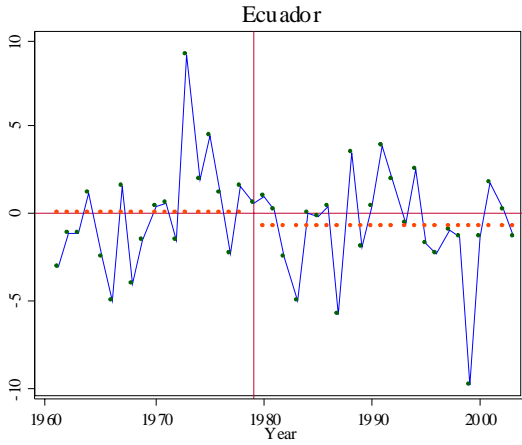

Column (6) reports the regime classification of Golder (2005) that covers the period 1960-2000. The column reports the democratization year or the year of a reverse regime transition from relatively stable democracy to autocracy for reforming countries. Non-reforming countries are split to always autocratic and always non-democratic. In Pakistan and Peru the regime changes very often ("volatile").

In all methods we impose a five-year stability requirement to identify a regime change. When there are consecutive jumps in the Polity composite democracy index and the Freedom House regime characterization we identify a regime change using the latter year. For example in Greece the Polity index jumps from -7 to +1 in 1974 and from +1 to +8 in 1975. We thus record democratization in Greece in 1975. Analogously in Cape Verde the Freedom House characterization jumps from "not free" to "partially free" in 1990, and from "partially free" to "free" in 1991. We thus record democratization in Cape Verde in 1991. For more details on the regime classification see the text (Section 3.2).

Country Graphs: Notes

The Supplementary Appendix Country Graphs plot the evolution of time-demeaned average real per capita GDP growth in the ten years before and after a permanent democratic transition (Data from World Bank World Development Indicators Database 2005) for each transition country. Table 1 of the main paper lists the democratization countries and gives a short description of the transition. The Supplementary Appendix Table reports sample details.

Supplementary Appendix Figures 1-5: Notes

Supplementary Appendix Figures 1 to 5 plot the evolution of time-demeaned (country growth rate minus the average growth rate for that year) average investment rate, schooling, life expectancy, government spending and trade in the ten years before and after a permanent democratic transition (Data come from the World Bank World Development Indicators Database (2005) and Barro-Lee (2001)). Table 1 lists the democratization countries and gives a short description of the transition.
