Conditions for Successful Change

Overview

The Conditions for Successful Change tool is used to help clarify the essential conditions that must exist for a post-budget reduction change to be implemented successfully. The tool also helps clarify strategies for creating those conditions and ensuring their full use and impact.

On the following pages, you will find a sample list of conditions and a worksheet to use to develop conditions to help ensure that a specific change effort is successful. You may use as is or modify to reflect your particular situation.

- Appropriate time is allocated for designing, planning, and implementing the post-budget reduction changes.
- The management and employees share a common vision of where we are headed and how we intend to get there.
- The rewards and recognition process encourages appropriate behaviors.
- A learning-oriented, problem-solving climate is encouraged.
- A balance exists between the technical side (e.g., technology, workflow) and the human dynamics during the transition to the new environment.
- The necessary workflow/process and technological changes have been made to support the change efforts.
- Division and Department Leaders “walk the talk” and offer visible support for achieving the desired end state.
- Division and Department Leaders understand their role in making the post-budget reduction environment a success.
- Training is made available to those who require it.
- People affected by the changes have ample opportunity to discuss the implications of the reduction in force changes.
1. Review the sample conditions for post-budget reduction change and develop a list of conditions that will need to be in place for our change effort to succeed. Don't word them as things we need to do, but rather as statements about the conditions needed for the change to succeed.

Any item on your list should pass the following test:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>If this condition is not in place, the change is likely to suffer and perhaps fail.</th>
</tr>
</thead>

2. Who will be responsible for “overseeing” the conditions for success and ensuring that they are in place throughout the change? How will this person (or people) obtain the authority needed to ensure they occur?

3. Which of the conditions for successful change are of the “highest priority”? How will you ensure that these top priorities are present during the implementation of the change effort?

4. Determine specifically how you will use the conditions for successful change to help guide the process throughout the change effort implementation.
