The Edward Connery Lathem ’51 Digital Library Fellowship provides an opportunity for a graduating student or recent graduate of Dartmouth College to spend a year learning and contributing to aspects of digital library production, delivery, assessment and preservation. The fellowship may be tailored to the individual interests of the candidate where their skills support the mission of the developing Digital Library Program. <http://www.dartmouth.edu/~library/digital/>. The Dartmouth Digital Library Program promotes innovative research and teaching through the strategic digitization of Library holdings and the open access publication of new digital scholarship. The Program responds to increasing demand for global access to our collections.

Successful applicants will be highly motivated and innovative individuals, with an interest in and aptitude for working with digital conversion hardware and software and online libraries. Typical work may include helping make Dartmouth Digital Collections more visible in major search engines, maintaining Digital Program web pages, providing research support for librarians on emerging topics relevant to the semantic web, working with the Digital Production Unit imaging and processing data, or working with the Digital Preservation Librarian saving and preserving materials from our digital collections. Strong interpersonal and communications skills and an enthusiasm for learning new technology are essential.
