I work with an organization called Health for America that provides $50,000 fellowships to recent graduates interested in health innovation. The fellowship is relatively new and it was profiled in Forbes this past December.

Here is further information for your fellowship listings:

- Health for America This program grants a $50,000 year-long fellowship to young leaders from diverse academic backgrounds, including computer science, design, entrepreneurship, and health. Over the course of the year, fellows will work together to gain practical immersive experience in health innovation, with help from physicians and community leaders and exposure to different areas of the country. Applicants for the 2014-15 fellowship are required to have completed their undergraduate degree between January 2011 and July 2014. The application is due in May for a September start date.
The $50,000 fellowship in health innovation that teams you up with two other young leaders looking to make a difference.

Apply now to be a 2014-15 Fellow.

We’re seeking three recent grads from diverse backgrounds (computer science, design, entrepreneurship, health) to create and implement a health solution.
