The Cohen Children’s Medical Center (CCMC) summer research internship program (North Shore, Long Island) originated in the Division of Developmental & Behavioral Pediatrics in 2010, and has grown steadily over the years based on the extraordinary feedback from past interns and the equally positive experience that clinical faculty have experienced while working with such bright, highly talented and motivated students. Clinical research internship positions are now available in 5 different pediatric divisions – providing students with a range of options in terms of minimum time commitment, clinical focus, and ambulatory vs. in-patient setting.

- Developmental & Behavioral Pediatrics
- Hospital Medicine
- Infectious Disease
- Nephrology
- Pulmonary

The attached Word document provides basic information about the 5 different internship programs and provides a link to a more detailed description of each program.

Students who are interested in collaborating on one or more clinical research projects -- with opportunities for co-authorship on abstracts and papers – may apply for an internship position in any or all of the 5 specialty areas. The application process is identical for each of the 5 programs. Interested students must submit a completed application, a current CV or résumé, an unofficial transcript, and a separate writing sample. Although letters of recommendation are not required initially, select candidates may be asked to provide 2 letters from faculty in further support of their application. The application deadline is March 13th; however, students are strongly encouraged to apply early. All students will be notified in early April of their application status.
