Nathan Smith Society alum, Zachary Martinez 13, has alerted me to this post-graduate opportunity that might be of interest to a member of the Class of 2015.

Hello Dr. Witters,
Here's another opportunity at the Camden Coalition of Health Care Providers that some graduating seniors might be interested in.

I'm also including links to the past two freakonomics podcasts featuring Dr. Jeff Brenner, CCHP's CEO.

Are You a Public Health, Medicine, or Social Work Graduate Looking for a Unique Service Experience?

The Camden Coalition of Healthcare Providers is seeking passionate, service-driven individuals who are interested in learning about the healthcare system and the barriers that medically and socially complex patient oftentimes face.

As a Community HealthCorps member, or “Health Coach”, you will provide community outreach, patient education and advocacy, and help to create linkages to meet the various health and social needs of complex, vulnerable, Camden residents. This is an exciting opportunity for those interested in serving on the frontlines of healthcare (with an emphasis on patient-centered care) and making a difference in patients’ lives. This position is also a fantastic learning experience for those preparing for a healthcare career. Most of our current and past members are recent college graduates who are interested in pursuing a degree in medicine, public health, or social work, or a related field.

We are now accepting applications for the 2015 – 2016 program year. To learn more and apply, visit http://www.camdenhealth.org/future-americorps-members/.
