

Instructions for the Use of the Publication Agreement Amendment [NIH-specific]

This AMENDMENT is a legal instrument that accompanies and modifies the publisher's agreement you sign in order to have your work published in a journal. Signing and adding the amendment to your publisher's agreement enables you to retain the right to grant NIH a license to accept a copy of your article and to make it available for public distribution via PubMed Central within 12 months after its initial publication in a journal.

Authors submitting articles reporting on research supported wholly or in part by NIH MUST add an amendment to their publication agreements. Some journals insist on signature of an online, electronic publishing agreement that is not amendable. Authors should not sign such agreements, but should request that an agreement be sent to them by mail or e-mail. Authors should be assured that such a request will in no way affect their chances of publication.

To use this NIH-specific amendment:

Step 1: Sign your publisher's copyright transfer or publication agreement when you submit your final manuscript for publication with the following statement written above your signature:

“subject to attached amendment”

You must complete Step 1 in order to make the amendment binding.

Step 2: Attach this amendment (next page) with the information filled in and your signature on the bottom.

Step 3: Send both to the publisher and fax a copy to 603-646-3702.
