Insourced

How Importing Jobs Impacts the Healthcare Crisis Here and Abroad

Dr. Kate Tulenko

Dramatically recounts the causes and cascading effects of American insourcing of foreign healthcare workers

Instead of outsourcing high-paying jobs overseas—as the manufacturing and service sectors do—hospitals and other healthcare companies insource healthcare labor from developing countries. This insourcing has caused tens of thousands of high-paying local jobs in the healthcare sector to effectively vanish from the reach of US citizens, weakened the healthcare systems of developing nations, and constricted the US health professional education system. Tulenko reveals this undisclosed aspect of the current healthcare crisis, and offers ways to create better American health professional education, more high-paying healthcare jobs, and improved health for the poor in the developing world.

On Suffering Pathways to Healing and Health

Beverley M. Clarke

The first book to address issues of suffering as separate from pain that require psychologically and culturally sensitive interventions

Currently in medicine, theories of pain regard pain and suffering as one and the same. Beverley M. Clarke argues convincingly that suffering is often separate from pain, has universal measurable characteristics, and requires suffering-specific treatments that are sensitive to the patient's individual psychology and cultural background.

Clarke believes passionately that the management of suffering in medicine is the responsibility of all health care practitioners. Until they come to identify and understand suffering as distinct from pain, the entire health care system will continue to carry the financial and moral burden of incomplete diagnoses, inappropriate referrals for care, ineffective treatment interventions, and lost human potential.

Hunger

The Biology and Politics of Starvation

John R. Butterly and Jack Shepherd

A timely and provocative look at the role political developments and the biology of nutrition play in world famine

“Authors John Butterly and Jack Shepherd advance a most interesting perspective on the biological basis for individual and political behavior, a perspective often lacking in any of the political science books covering the behavior of policy-makers. . . . Hunger: The Biology and Politics of Starvation should be required reading for students, researchers, and project implementers with an interest in hunger alleviation, irrespective of their disciplinary background. With an emphasis on the interaction between biology and politics, the authors provide a constructive, evidence-based, and comprehensive analysis of hunger in all its dimensions.”

INTERFACES: STUDIES IN VISUAL CULTURE

Technologies of History

Visual Media and the Eccentricity of the Past

Steve F. Anderson

Captain Kirk fought Nazis. JFK's assassination is a videogame touchstone. And there's no history like "Drunk History."

"Steve F. Anderson's striking contention is that theorists of history pay too little attention to the way media products like those shape the understanding both of historical events and of the way history is told. . . . What most interests Anderson about many often-bizarre, history-related media products is that they contribute to the study and understanding of historiography."
