Since it began in 2005, thirty-one Dartmouth students have held the ten-week internships, which take place during the spring or fall terms. Preference is given to applicants who have taken coursework related to the Middle East or who are developing an interest in global learning. While in Kuwait

Dartmouth interns work in various offices and/or departments according to their interests and the University’s needs. Past interns have worked in the Office of Student Life, the Biology Department, the Writing Center, Computer Science and the Intensive English Program, to name a few. The AUK program administrator works closely with each intern to match him or her with the appropriate offices and/or departments before they arrive. Interns may also study Arabic, deepen their understanding of the Middle East, and work with individual faculty members on research projects. They form lasting relationships, and join a growing group of Dartmouth and AUK students who have had this distinctive cross-cultural opportunity.
AUK is Kuwait’s first private liberal arts university. It is dedicated to providing students with knowledge, self-awareness, critical thinking skills, effective communication, and respect for diversity. With Dartmouth College as its international partner, AUK opened in September 2004. Dartmouth works closely with AUK faculty, administrators, and students on a range of issues related to creating a liberal arts environment based on the American model of higher education; classes are taught in English. Past Dartmouth interns have returned to the Middle East as Fulbright Scholars, while others have begun or continued to advance their study of Arabic and take a more active interest in the region.

AUK students come to Dartmouth in the summer for one month. To date, 38 AUK students have come to Dartmouth.
